GALVANINA

From deep under Italy's Apennine Mountains comes one of the best mineral waters on Earth and one of Italy's favourite. It is favoured for its subtle minerality, crisp and refreshing, clean finish.

The quality and purity of the spring's water is determined by geology. Snow falling on the peaks of the Apennines melts and gravitates to a porous layer of ancient sandstone, dating back to the Pliocene Era, deep below the surface. This sandstone is protected by layers of impervious clay, allowing the water to slowly flow through the porous layer, making its way to the spring. It takes over two and a half years for the water to make its way from the summit of the mountains to the spring.

In 1901 the Galvanina company built a plant near the spring to bottle the famous waters. In 2010, Galvanina celebrated their 100th anniversary by releasing a stunning retro bottle. Made from clear glass with raised wording and graphic detail, it strikes a fine looking and stylish addition to the table.

This is where Galvanina is so very different. It is an understated mineral water and the bottle looks beautiful with its uncluttered lines and bold shape.
